The World Book and Copyright Day

The World Book and Copyright Day is marked annually on 23 April, a symbolic date for World Literature. It was celebrated for the first time on 23 April 1995, at Paris, when UNESCO decided to mark 23 April as World Book and Copyright Day and for paying worldwide tribute to authors and books, as well as to encourage everyone (particularly the young) to discover the pleasure of reading to gain a renewed respect for the irreplaceable contributions of those who have furthered the social and cultural progress of humanity.

On this day in 1611, Miguel de Cervantes, William Shakespeare and Inca Garcilaso de la Vega died. It is also the date of birth or death of other prominent authors such as Maurice Druon, Haldor K.Laxness, Vladimir Nabokov, Josep Pla and Manuel Mejía Vallejo. The connection between 23 April and books was first made in 1923 by booksellers in Spain as a way to honour the author Miguel de Cervantes, who died on that day. Each year, UNESCO and the international organizations representing the three major sectors of the book industry - publishers, booksellers and libraries, select the World Book Capital for a one-year period, effective 23 April each year.

For 2018, the city of Athens was chosen for the quality of its activities, supported by the entire book industry. The aim is to make books accessible to the city’s entire population, including migrants and refugees. The proposed programme includes meetings with writers, translators and illustrators, concerts, thematic exhibitions, poetry readings and workshops for publishing professionals.

Sharjah (United Arab Emirates) was named World Book Capital for the year 2019 by the Director-General of UNESCO, Irina Bokova, on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee.

During the course the participants were given information about the various aspects of book publishing like copyright, editing, e-publishing, sales and marketing, designing and publishing.

The youngest and the smallest district of Assam, a bio-diversity hotspot, a bio-diversity heritage site, a place that resides in every Assamese heart and a travel destination of the connoisseurs of art, craft and culture—Majuli today walks the talk on climate change. Majuli is the first carbon neutral district in India.

At the Theme Pavilion of the New Delhi World Book Fair a lively discussion on the project SACReD, a word that epitomizes the very unique social and cultural fabric of Majuli, gave the visitors insights about issues like carbon emission, carbon neutrality and biodiversity conservation etc.

The first of its kind in the entire country, SACReD stands for Sustainable Actions for Climate Resilient Development in Majuli. Dr Sumana Bhattacharya, Vice President, Climate Change, IORA Ecological Solutions moderated the discussion.

In his opening remarks, Shri A K Johri, Principal Chief Conservator of Forest (Bio-diversity & Climate Change), Govt. of Assam said, “Climate is bound to change. But our worry needs to be about climate change due to anthropogenic reasons. We need to take both mitigation and adaptation measures to counter climate change. In this context Assam’s vision is in line with national action plan on climate change.” By planting more trees we can address 50 percent of the problem of carbon emission, he said. Advocating scientific intervention he said that bio-diversity conservation is the most important step towards the goal of carbon neutrality.

Deliberating on the woes of Majuli, Shri Pallav Gopal Jha, Deputy Commissioner, Majuli district said, “Once a thriving river island of 1250 sq km area, Majuli is now reduced to 550 sq kilometer thanks to its perennial problems of erosion and flooding.” Seeking cooperation of all the stakeholders for the project that started last year with the personal intervention of Assam’s Chief Minister Sarbananda Sonowal, he said, “Majuli is destined to make a mark on the world map for its climate-resilient growth while nurturing its rich cultural heritage and biological diversity.”

On a philosophical note Dr Rita Chowdhury, Director, NBT said, “As the centre of Assam’s Bhakti Movement and as the place that gave us the greater Assamese identity, Majuli is always close to my heart. I may not be the right person to talk about carbon emission. All I can say this project, for future generation, would make Majuli a diamond, which is also another form of carbon, without disturbing Majuli’s innate hospitality and cultural diversity.”

Sharing the details of the project, Shri Swapan Mehra, Founder and CEO, IORA Ecological Solutions, the implementing agency of the project said, “This is the first initiative in India that has been materialized under direct political jurisdiction.” He also gave the details of the 10 year action plan involving introduction of electric vehicles, solar panels, replacement of fuel wood by LPG and construction of roads by more efficient materials. Seeking full cooperation of the community as a whole, he said, “Carbon Neutrality is just another name of non-violence where people don’t need to be coerced.”

In her remarks, Ms Chaya Bhanti, Co-founder, IORA Ecological Solutions said that the project is a positive example for India where the dual goals of carbon neutrality and eco-system conservation are being achieved keeping the spiritual and cultural tradition of Majuli in tact.

A short booklet on the project was also released in the function.
Popular screen writer, novelist and winner of the European Union Prize for Literature, Kallia Papadaki was the Guest of Honour at the inaugural function of the New Delhi World Book Fair. A member of the delegation of European writers, Kallia Papadaki was at the many literary discussions and readings at various fora at NDWBF. Fair Daily stole some moments from her busy schedule for a small chat.

Q: Is this your first visit to India?
A: Not actually. I have been to Mumbai, Kerala and few other towns in coastal India.

Q: What is your impression of the New Delhi World Book Fair 2018?
A: It is a really a big fair in terms of size and it seems to be extremely popular as there are large crowds thronging the stalls.

Q: Can you tell us something about your writing?
A: Some books are with you for a long time even before you start writing. My book ‘Dendrites’ is about the immigration Diaspora and is based on the second generation American Greeks who no longer really know their country of origin nor do they feel a sense of belonging in America. There is a sense of displacement that runs through the story. This is a story about three generations of Greeks who went to America to chase the American dream but did not really meet their expectations. We always hear stories about winners and not about losers and their struggles. This is a story about those who could not make it. ‘Dendrites’ are at the core of a neuroscientific process of communication. On an abstract sense, the title signifies memory – located in the neuron synapses and its transmitters – family trees and the mark they leave on future generations. It also reflects on the ephemeral beauty of human nature – delicate and mouldable which lasts only for a moment but leaves a mark on its succeeding generations.

Q: Your writing seems to reflect a lot of sadness. Why is that?
A: We all know that happiness is a momentary truth. A perfect day can last a moment but a miserable day can last forever and writing about it is helpful in overcoming it. Stories about such experiences resonate with many and can bring people together.

Q: Do you write with an audience in mind?
A: Not really. As an avid reader, we can understand whether a piece of writing is good or bad. I try to write at least a page and a half each day and edit it at the start of each and edit it at the start of another day. I write for myself.

Q: How do you find the courage to write about your personal fears and emotions which can be hard to share?
A: Writing has been my safe haven. If I did not write about the things that troubled me, I would have lost my mind. As writers, as introverts, we spend most of our time alone during which we tend to have monologues. Writing is a way of releasing them into the world and from ourselves.

Q: Do you have trouble detaching yourself from the book that you are writing?
A: A book can have many characters. Mine has 25, although all of them do not remain till the end. At many times, it is like these dead people that you may have known in life. In a strange way, they live in your head and they tail behind you. There are so many people that we carry with us and in a way we spend a lot of time with them.

Q: Is there a way we can get your writing in India or in English?
A: Well, Greece is a small country and although some translations works are underway, they are in major languages that surround the country. English is a barrier in that region where French, German and Italian are more popular.

Youth Power at Hindi Book Stalls

That today’s youths are captivated by digital devices and hardly read books is really not true, said Hindi publishers at the New Delhi World Book Fair. Whether it is just browsing through one or buying books or interacting with authors at the stalls of the Hindi publishers, young adults were the frontrunners this time. “It augurs well for the future of Hindi publishing. Around 95 percent of our visitors are youth,” said Arun Maheshwari of Vani Prakashan. Echoing his sentiment Piyush Kumar of Prabhat Prakashan said, “This has been a trend in the last 2-3 years, but this time the footfalls, particularly the number of young visitors, have increased manifold belting our apprehension that the ongoing renovation work of Pragati Maidan would be a spoiler. May be the proximity of Hall No 12 to Metro Station is the reason.” Alind Maheshwari of Rajkamal Prakashan said there is a renewed interest for Hindi books and also the publicity the Fair has garnered has made it possible.

What are the Hindi books the young adults are looking for? You can guess only at your own peril. A section was frantically looking for books to crack competitive examinations and books on motivation and personality development. The stalls keeping these books were making a killing. An unusually large number of youth were looking for biographies and autobiographies.

Thespian Dilip Kumar’s biography by Saira Banu was selling like hot cakes. So was the case with Andhakaar Kaal, the Hindi translation of Sashi Tharoor’s latest publication, An Era of Darkness: The British Empire in India. “Fiction, both in classic and contemporary forms, in originals and Hindi translations are fast disappearing from our racks,” said Piyush Kumar. Books on tribal discourse and women issues were also getting much attention this year. Rajeev Ranjan, the author of books like Amcho Bastar, Bastar 1857 and Bastarnama, was overwhelmed by the response he had been receiving at the Fair.

Books on Pakistan and Hindi translations of fictions by Pakistani writers were selling well. Kitne Pakistan by Kamaleshwar and Kashmirnama by Ashok Kumar Pandey were a hit with the readers. Bhagwant Anmol, the author of Zindagi 50-50, a book about the trials and tribulations faced by third gender, was overjoyed with the response he received at the Fair.

There was a steady stream of young readers to buy books on unusual topics. A case in point is the book Chunav Kaise Jite: A to Z of Indian Electioneering by Sharad Pandey. Books on journalism, career opportunities and skill development have a strong readership among young readers in Hindi.

“Books on satire by new and established writers are a major hit among Hindi readers this year,” said Rajen of K K Publications. School children accompanied by parents are buying a lot of books, particularly on science and science activities. Publishers of books for children and pedagogy were a happy lot because of institutional buyers, informed Rajesh Pareshar of Eklavya-Pitara.

Hindi readers, particularly the younger ones, were showing renewed interest on the works of eminent Hindi writers of yore like Premchand, Jayshankar Prasad and Harivanch Rai Bachhan. “It is heartening to note that books on mythology and philosophy are also becoming increasingly popular among the young readers,” said Chandrasekhar Chaturvedi of Rajpal & Sons.

Hindi publishers left no stone unturned to indulge the new generation of readers. Digital books, e-books and audio books were the new mantras with many leading Hindi publishers. They were busy with B2B meetings with players like Flipkart, Amazon and Kindle. Many of them have dedicated portals for new writers. The concept of books on demand are the in-things in Hindi publishing today. One can even download Hindi audio books, both classic and contemporary, from the Play Store or App Store. A large number of young professionals are continuously hearing good Hindi books these days. And, book fairs are not for readers only!
Daman Book Fair

Shri Suresh Bhai J. Patel, Chairman of the Daman Zilla Panchayat inaugurated the Fair. Shri P.S. Jani, CEO District Panchayat; Shri Harshit Jain, Director Education among others were also present on the occasion.

During the Fair, a wide range of books covering various genres in major Indian languages were exhibited. A large number of students from various schools availed the UT Administration’s scheme where the students visiting the Fair along with their teachers could select a book of their choice. These books were sponsored by the UT government.
